Edward Lionel Joseph & Ozonair, Limited.—"An improvement in or relating to the manufacture of tea."

Abstract.—The invention consists in employing ozonised air, free from nitrogen, produced by means of certain apparatus described. The purpose of employing ozonised air is to oxidise and sterilize the tea during the process of manufacture.

The apparatus consists of sets of electrode panels constructed with sheets of dielectric material (such as mica or micanite) with electrodes (metal gauze) mounted on opposite sides. Each grid is mounted in a rectangular frame. A series of panels are mounted side by side in vertical planes in a casing. Air is caused to flow between the panels. A step-up transformer is provided for producing high tension alternating electric currents. [A rotary converter is mentioned as well for the case of direct current supply.] The ozonisation of the air is produced by silent discharge of the high tension alternating current at the electrode panels.
