THE following Specifications have been accepted:—

No. 1,228 of December 14, 1911.

James Priestnall Naylor.—"Electric day and night sign."

Abstract.—This invention relates to improved apparatus for displaying advertisements, signalling, or communicating messages by day or night, wherein letters, characters, or symbols are caused to appear upon a background by the automatic selection of the proper elements from a group upon a panel, a series of said panels being suitably juxtaposed so that words, sentences, or devices can be caused to appear and disappear.

The objects of the invention are to provide: (1) an apparatus wherein various advertisements can be displayed, not only by night but also by day; (2) an improved form of monogram or panel; (3) separate display elements for the aforesaid monograms, each of which will be self-contained, so as to be removable from the panel and replaceable by another without disturbance to other elements or parts of the apparatus; (4) elements having a series of differently coloured members for the production of differently coloured characters or the like; (5) improved means whereby saving of current is effected when the display elements are at rest, so that no electricity is consumed during the period of display or non-display of said elements; (6) an apparatus wherein the letters of the words or phrases and symbols can be caused to appear and disappear upon a group of panels in any desired order and by means of smaller number of conducting wires than has been previously possible, it is stated, thus effecting a considerable saving in the cost of production; (7) an apparatus which can be manually operated by means of a keyboard, or can be automatically operated by means of a record strip; and if desired having means for producing the record strip; (8) means if desired for making a record of the advertisement or the like produced and for determining and recording the time and the duration of the display of the advertisement; (9) means for operating the advertisement display from a distance; and (10) means to enable the electric lamps to be used in series.
