"Improvements in and connected with multi-blade propellers, fans, and the like."

Abstract :--

The inventor states: -My invention relates to improvements in and connected with multi-blade propellers, fans, and the like, and has reference to propellers, fans, and the like of that type, where the blades are arranged one behind the other. My present invention has for its object to obviate difficulties of manufacture, and consists in a particular construction of fan or propeller designed to enable the articles to be commercially manufactured.

The primary feature of the present invention resides in the fact that the blades are constructed separately from the boss and then assembled so as to become integral, or substantially integral, with the boss with the various blades in their correct positions relatively one to the other. The claims are:—

A multi-blade propeller or fan having radiating blades arranged one behind the other in a straight line and so that all the blades of a series are parallel, the blades being separately formed and connected to a boss and separated one from the other the required distance.

2. Multi-blade propellers or fans having their parallel blades formed of stampings or the like, said stampings being threaded upon a boss and separated one from the other by distance sleeves upon the boss, and similar distance sleeves upon a rod or spindle passing through holes in the outer ends of the blades.

3. In multi-blade propellers or fans stampings so formed as to be reversible, so that one stamping forms the blades on either side of a symmetrical central blade.

4. A multi-blade propeller whose blades are separately and completely finished-and are then cast on a boss so that their inner ends amalgamate with the boss.

5. A multi-blade propeller having its blades separately formed and provided with holes so located that when each series of blades is given the correct pitch, a spindle which serves to carry distance pieces can be passed through the holes. 6. The improved multi-blade propeller constructed and arranged in the manner hereinbefore specified.

"Improvements in tea-leaf rolling machines."

The inventor states: -The object of my invention is to provide very efficient tea-leaf rolling machinery of the kind in which the rolling of the leaf is effected in the space between the internal wall of a rotating cylinder, or drum, and the exterior of a rotatal 's roller, or the like, situated in the said cylinder or drum.

According to my invention I mount a cylinder, of any suitable length and diameter, on rollers or runners, upon which it can be rotated. Each otherwise closed end of the said cylinder has a central opening in it through which openings a fluted roller, or the equivalent, is inserted, the said roller, or the equivalent, being secured to a shaft the ends of which are carried by arms mounted on a shaft outside the cylinder, so that the roller, or the equivalent, can be allowed to exim contact with, and apply pressure to, the leaf in the cylinder and give the necessary rolling action to the said teaf, the said roller, or the equivalent, can be moved into, and held in, a position which will allow the cylinder to be charged

-To allow of the position of the said roller, or the equivalent, relatively to the centre of the cylinder, being varied so as to obtain the best position of the roller for rolling the leaf, the arms carrying the said roller, or the equivalent, may be made telescopic, or otherwise adjustable in length.

As the weight of the roller, or the equivalent, will usually be more than is required to properly coll the leaf, I provide an adjustable counter-balance weight which can be carried on a lever-arm secured to a shaft, or bar, which connects the arms which carry the roller, or the equivalent, so that, by adjusting the said weight the rolling pressure on the leaf is increased, or diminished, or relieved altogether.

The said roller, or the equivalent, may be made in any suitable manner which will give the rolling effect; for example, it may be made in the form of a cylindrical shell, carrying, on its periphery, battens for acting on and rolling the leaf, or it may consist of battens a suitable distance apart and connected to the shaft by spiders, this skeleton form giving very good ventilation.

The cylinder can be driven from the main driving shaft of the machine by a pinion, secured on the said shaft, engaging with a toothed ring secured to the cylinder at or near one end thereof. The main driving shaft has also secured to it a sprocket wheel carrying a pitch-chain passing over a sprocket-wheel secured to the shaft which carries the roller, or the equivalent, which gear causes the roller, or the equivalent, to rotate in a direction the opopsite to that in which the cylinder rotates, so that the leaf, being subjected to these contrary motions, is rolled, or curled, very efficiently.

To allow of the leaf being fed into, and discharged from, the cylinder, the said cylinder is provided with a movable door preferably running the whole length of the cylinder, which door, when opened, is preferably completely disengaged from the cylinder and placed on supports so that it then constitutes a feeding platform, from which the leaf is fed into the cylinder, and when this door is opened and disposed, as it has then no connection with the cylinder, the cylinder can be rotated so that the rolled leaf will be discharged when the door opening comes to the lower position.

When charging the cylinder it is necessary that it be stopped in the proper position, and this cannot be conveniently done by means of the driving-band setter. I provide, for this purpose, a hand-wheel fast on the end of the shaft carrying the roller, or the equivalent, so that by turning this hand-wheel the cylinder will, by means of the aforesaid driving gear. be brought to the position required.

The claims are :

In tea-leaf rolling machines, a rotatable cylinder in which is carried a rotatable fluted, or battened, roller, or its equivalent, which is carried so that it can be allowed to swing towards the internal wall of the cylinder, and automatically apply pressure to the leaf under treatment, the said cylinder and the said roller, or its equivalent, being positively driven in opposite directions; all substantially as hereinbefore described and illustrated in the accompanying drawing.

2. In an arrangement in accordance with the preceding claiming clause, carrying the internal roller, or its equivalent, on arms pivoted outside the cylinder; substantially as hereinbefore described and illustrated in the accompanying drawing, whether the said arms be adjustable in length or not, and whether a counterweight be used or not.

3. In an arrangement in accordance with the preceding first claiming clause, driving the internal roller, or its equivalent, by means of chain gear, from a main driving shaft whose axis is coincident with the centres on which arms carrying the said roller, or the equivalent, can swing, and driving the cylinder by toothed gear direct from the said driving shaft so that the cylinder and the roller, or its equivalent, are rotated in opposite directions, all substantially as hereinbefore described and illustrated in the accompanying drawing.

In apparatus in accordance with the last preceding claiming clause, the combination of a hand-wheel with the shaft of the internal roller, or its equivalent, so that the cylinder can, through the driving gear, be readily turned to the best position for feeding in, and discharging, the leaf, substantially as hereinbefore described and illustrated in the accompanying drawing.

A tea-leaf rolling machine constructed as hereinbefore described and illustrated in the accompanying drawing. One sheet of drawings.
