All householders shall deposit or cause to be deposited the dust, ashes, sweepings, rubbish, and other refuse from their premises in cylindrical galvanized wrought iron bins to be supplied by them, and to be constructed in such a manner and of such weight that the whole receptacle with its contents can easily be lifted and emptied into the scavenging cart. The bins shall be placed daily on the edge of the road outside the householder's dwellings or shops between the hours of 6 A.M. and 6.30 A.M., and it shall not be lawful for any person to place or cause to be placed such dust, ashes, sweepings, rubbish, or refuse in any street, unless the same shall be contained in bins as

"An improved hand soldering tool."

Abstract.—The inventor states :—

According to my invention, the inner chamber or compartment which receives the fused solder is furnished with a valve rod passing through said chamber and extending to the nose of the bit, the valve for controlling the flow of the solder being formed at an intermediate point on the rod, and the extension of the rod beyond the valve being channelled to provide a passage for the solder. The said inner chamber may be conveniently formed by a tube which also serves to unite the reservoir body to the bit. The outer chamber or reservoir is provided with a cover or lid which seals it externally and so enables the tool to be turned over without spilling the solder.

The heating of the solder and bit is effected by gas, electricity, charcoal or anthracite.

The heated parts of the tool are connected to the handle by means of a cage or series of rods which do not allow of the transmission of heat in any considerable amount to the handle, and thus ensure the latter remaining cool.

The claims are :—

1. In a hand soldering tool of the kind having a reservoir for receiving solid solder and means for fusing the solder and heating the bit, a tubular channel for receiving the melted solder in combination with a valve rod passing through said chamber and extending to the nose of the bit, the valve being formed at an intermediate point on the valve rod, and the extension of the rod beyond the valve being channelled to provide a passage for the solder, substantially as described.
 2. A constructional form of the soldering tool claimed in claim 1, wherein the reservoir body is connected by means of rods to a plate carrying the handle, for the purpose specified.
 3. In a hand soldering tool as claimed in claim 1, a swivel lid with actuating arm adapted to engage with a catch on the frame, substantially as described.
 4. In a hand soldering tool as claimed in claims 1 and 3, the adjusting nut T and co-operating parts for adjusting the position of the valve, substantially as described.
 5. In a hand soldering tool as claimed in claims 1, 3, and 4, a nose piece of steel or steel alloy, substantially as described.
 6. A hand soldering tool, substantially as described with reference to either of the forms illustrated in the accompanying drawings, and operating as specified.

"Electric welding method and apparatus,"

Abstract.—The inventor states :—

The invention relates to current regulating apparatus, for example as employed in connection with the operation of arc lamps, electric furnaces, and melting and fusing apparatus; and more particularly as embodied in a device for adapting alternating current to electric cutting or welding apparatus of the arc type to provide the requisite heat.

It has for its object to provide a self-regulating current controlling device or transformer for use with a variable resistance circuit, encountered, for example, in the operation of electric arc welding and cutting apparatus. By means of a cutting or welding transformer of this character, the current employed for producing the arc will be maintained within predetermined limits and will provide a stable cutting or welding arc as well as affording, during operation, an absolute control of heat conditions by maintaining the proper voltage to hold the welding or cutting arc. Means may be provided, moreover, to enable a change of heat conditions to be effected. The novel transformer, also, is of simple and rugged construction, is conveniently transported, and is so designed as to be entirely without moving parts, or air gaps, either fixed or adjustable. It possesses, furthermore, a high power factor, resulting in economy of operation. Moreover, an operator of but limited training and skill may use the same to produce a satisfactory weld therewith; and in the operation of welding or cutting, the usual type of electrodes, such as those of carbon or metal, may be employed.

The claims are :—

1. The herein described method of regulating the current in the secondary of two coils or circuits placed in inductive relation, consisting in developing alternating magnetism through the action of the current in each or either of said circuits in a suitable iron core having a complete magnetic shunt, and developing in said shunt a counter magneto-motive force.
2. The herein described method of regulating the current in the secondary of two coils or circuits placed in inductive relation, consisting in developing alternating magnetism through the action of the current in each or either of said circuits in a suitable iron core having a complete magnetic shunt, and developing in said shunt a counter magneto-motive force by causing current of the secondary to flow about said shunt.
3. The herein described method of regulating the current in the secondary of two coils or circuits placed in inductive relation, consisting in developing alternating magnetism through the action of the current in each or either of said circuits in a suitable iron core having a complete magnetic shunt, and developing in said shunt a counter magneto-motive force by causing current of the secondary to flow about said shunt, the winding being such as to automatically effect a decrease of the potential of the secondary current on increase of said current.
4. In an induction coil or transformer having a complete magnetic shunt; means adapted to vary the shunting effect proportionately to the secondary current.
5. An induction coil or transformer having a complete magnetic shunt, and a portion of its secondary winding extending about said shunt.
6. The combination with a member affording a closed magnetic circuit and two alternating current coils located in inductive relation upon a suitable core thereof: of a complete magnetic shunt for said chamber and about which one of said coils is contained.

8. The combination with a member affording a closed magnetic circuit and two alternating current coils located in inductive relation upon a suitable core thereof: of a complete magnetic shunt for the magnetism threading said coils, and of definite or determined strength varying automatically with an increase of current in one of the coils.
9. The combination with a source of substantially constant potential supply of alternating current, and a transformer having its primary connected thereto: of a complete magnetic shunt, having a portion of the secondary of the said transformer in proximity thereto.

10. The combination with a member affording a closed magnetic circuit, having end cores, a primary winding about one of said end cores, and a secondary winding thereon in inductive relation to said primary winding : of an intermediate shunting core about which said secondary winding is continued.

The combination with a member affording a closed magnetic circuit, having end cores and an intermediate shunting core : of a primary winding upon one of the end cores ; a secondary winding upon said core and in inductive relation to said primary winding ; and secondary windings about said shunting core and the other end core.

12. The combination with a member affording a closed magnetic circuit, having end cores and an intermediate shunting core : of a primary winding upon one of the end cores ; a secondary winding upon said core and in inductive relation to said primary winding ; and secondary windings about said shunting core and the other end core, the secondary windings being in series with one another.

13. The combination with a member affording a closed magnetic circuit, having end cores and an intermediate shunting core : of a primary winding upon one of the end cores ; a secondary winding upon said core and in inductive relation to said primary winding ; secondary windings about said shunting core and the other end core, the secondary windings being in series with one another ; and two leads taken respectively from the secondary winding of the primary winding core and the winding of the other secondary core.

14. The combination with a member affording a closed magnetic circuit, having end cores and an intermediate shunting core : of a primary winding upon one of the end cores ; a secondary winding upon said core and in inductive relation to said primary winding ; secondary windings about said shunting core and the other end core, the secondary windings being in series with one another ; and a plurality of taps taken from said last-named winding.
