THE following Specifications have been accepted:—

No. 1,918 of May 6, 1922.

Robert Benjamin Bather and Marshall Sons & Co. (India), Ltd.

Improvements in the process of manufacturing tea and apparatus therefor.

Abstract.—The applicants state that the usual process of manufacturing tea consists in subjecting the leaves to the following treatment in the order given, namely, withering, rolling, fermenting, drying, cutting, and sorting: during the rolling the leaf cells are broken and their contents distributed over the surface of the leaf, where they ultimately form a dark, hard and brittle layer: during the subsequent cutting and sorting, much of this valuable material is lost in the form of dust. To obviate this loss they propose to partially roll the withered leaves and then pass them into a ball breaker and sifting machine in order to separate the larger leaves from the small. The former are then cut while still moist and returned together with the small leaves to the roller for further treatment and are afterwards fermented and dried. In order to cut the still moist leaves a cutting machine is described comprising a vibrating hopper feed together with a comb and cutting teeth.

The claims are:—

1. In improvement in the process of manufacturing tea which consists in cutting or breaking the leaf at a stage in the manufacture at which the juices expressed from the leaf have not yet had time to dry or harden on the outside of the leaf.
2. An improvement in the process of manufacturing tea according to claim 1, which consists in withering the leaf, placing the same in a rolling machine but before the rolling process is complete passing the leaf through a cutting or breaking machine and then returning the same to the rolling machine.
3. An improvement in the process of manufacturing tea according to claim 2 in which the leaf when first removed from the rolling machine is placed into a ball breaking and/or sifting machine for the purpose of breaking up the balls and/or sifting the larger leaf from the smaller, the small leaf which does not require cutting being returned to the rolling machine and the larger leaf being passed through a cutting or breaking machine and then likewise returned to the rolling machine.
4. An improvement in the process of manufacturing tea according to any of the preceding claims the tea being cut while still in a moist condition or in a soft state.
5. An improvement in the process of manufacturing tea which consists in the tea being cut to size when the rolling process is only partially complete.
6. An improvement in the process of manufacturing tea according to any of the preceding claims, which consists in the tea being cut in a cutting machine of the kind herein described having a vibrating hopper feed.
7. A process of manufacturing tea in which the tea is withered, partially rolled, sifted and the balls broken up and then cut while in a soft condition, the leaf being subsequently returned to the rolling machine and after rolling being fermented and dried and sorted as may be found desirable.

8. A process of manufacturing tea in which the tea having been either sorted or cut in a soft state does not require cutting, breaking, or excessive handling when in the hard dry state whereby the chipping and breaking of the leaf and the loss or dried juice therefrom is avoided.

9. In apparatus for cutting undried tea the combination of a comb and cutting teeth with a feed hopper having a vibrating side or sides.

10. Improvements in internal combustion engines relating to means for adjusting the instant of explosion in the cycle.

Abstract.—The nature of the invention is described in the claims as follows:—

1. In internal combustion engines, means for adjusting the instant of explosion in the cycle, consisting in an adjustable flanged coupling joining two lengths of the shaft or spindle that transmits rotary or oscillatory motion from a principal rotating or oscillating member of the prime mover to its ignition apparatus, in which the periphery of one flange of the said coupling is prepared as a worm wheel and the periphery of the other flange is prepared with bearings which carry a worm pinion engaging with the said worm wheel.

2. In internal combustion engines, means for adjusting the instant of explosion in the cycle, consisting in a flanged coupling through which is transmitted rotary or oscillatory motion to the ignition apparatus, characterized in that the motion is transmitted through the teeth of a worm wheel and pinion.

3. In internal combustion engines, means for adjusting the instant of explosion in the cycle, consisting in a flanged coupling through which is transmitted rotary or oscillatory motion to the ignition apparatus, characterized in that a worm pinion is rotatably mounted in the periphery of one flange and engages teeth cut in the periphery of the other flange, so that relative rotation of the flanges can be made when required.
