Improved method of and apparatus for packing materials.

Abstract.—On the bottom of the press lies a plurality of removable packings to enable, by their successive removal, packing by stages without alteration of the travel of the ram. Above these is a floating platform with a slightly convex projection to fit the bottom of the case. The sides of the press have a metal lining and an inner wooden lining so as again to give each side of the press a slightly convex form. The sides may be removable. The ram head is slightly convex.

The claims are:—

1. A method of packing desiccated coconuts, copra, tea, or like substances or materials which comprises compressing the same into a box, bag, or other receptacle suitably supported peripherally (either internally or externally) during the packing operation whereby any liability for the sides of the container to bulge or burst will be eliminated.
 2. A method according to claim 1 in which the packing is carried out in stages or instalments in order to secure as uniform a density as possible throughout the receptacle.
 3. Apparatus for carrying out the above method as set out in claim 1 which comprises a steel or other container within which the box, bag, or the like is supported peripherally during the pressing operation.
 4. Apparatus according to claim 3 in which the container is made to open out for the purpose of permitting of the ready removal of the box, bag, or the like after the packing operation is completed, such container being maintained in its closed condition when required by suitable locking means.
 5. Apparatus according to claim 4 in which the box, bag, or the like is supported peripherally internally by means of a steel or other form or mould which may be removed in any suitable manner after the packing operation.
 6. Packing apparatus for the packing of copra, tea, coconut, and like substances comprising in combination an encircling band around the periphery of the container and a ram or press actuated by toggle levers or otherwise.
 7. The method of packing substantially as described.
 8. Apparatus for packing substantially as described and illustrated in the accompanying drawings.
 9. Receptacles, chests, containers, and the like packed by means of the hereinbefore described process.

An improved method of treating green tea leaf characterized by that a volume of drying air is first passed under, through, or across the leaves in one direction for a period of time and then a volume of drying air is passed under, through, or across the leaves in the opposite direction so that all the leaves are equally withered, substantially as described.
 2. In means for treating green tea leaf according to the improved method as claimed in claim 1, comprising a source of heated air, an inclined partition, valves in said partition, a valve or valves for permitting the escape of some of the heated air from the under side of said partition, a valve or valves for admitting cool air to the upper side of said partition and means for forcing the resultant mixture through a pair of withering lofts in one or other direction, substantially as described.
 3. In means for treating green tea leaf as claimed in claim 2, the arrangement of lofts, conduits adapted to connect selected lofts in pairs, valves for selecting the pair of lofts and the direction of the flow of drying air through said pair and blowers for forcing the drying air through the selected pair of lofts in the selected direction, substantially as described.
 4. In means for treating green tea leaf as claimed in claim 3, the arrangement of a fan in the conduit connecting any pair of lofts whereby the drying air forced through one loft can be received by said fan and impelled through the other loft of the pair, substantially as described.
 5. The arrangement of lofts for withering green tea leaf substantially as described and illustrated in the drawings.
