NOTIFICATION UNDER "THE PATENTS ORDINANCE, 1906."

THE following Specification has been accepted :—

No. 2,392 of May 24, 1929.

Max Einstein and Gustav Hollman.

Improvements in or relating to machines for the mechanical extraction of bast fibre from stalks of plants such as ramie, jute, and mallows.

Abstract.—The split and spread out stalks are guided by rollers at the top and bottom, with continuous advance, to a point close in front of the breaking point. One tool breaks off a piece of stalk, the next detaches the broken off woody part from the bast without the tools coming in contact with the bast itself.

The bast is continuously carried away or discharged.

The claims are :—

1. A machine of the kind set forth wherein the stalks introduced into the machine are continuously guided over a device for splitting and spreading them out, and then guided at the top and at the bottom up to a point close in front of the breaking point, the tools for the breaking and stripping which becomes operative one after another, being so arranged relatively to the last guide and breaking point that they do not come in contact with the bast.

2. A machine as in claim 1, wherein pairs of feed and guide rollers which drive the stalk towards the splitting knife and then guide it up to the breaking point, are in positive connection with the drive for the breaking and stripping tools, so that with continuous working and clean stripping of the stalk, jamming or other unfavourable conditions such as bending sideways or bending upwards of the stalks are avoided.

3. A machine as in claim 2, wherein one or more of the pairs of rollers are fluted or similarly formed to act as feed rollers, while the other pairs of rollers are used only for guiding and keep the stalks under light pressure during their advance.

4. A machine as in claim 1, wherein the last bottom guide of the stalk, forming the breaking edge, is supported by means of springs in order to reduce the pressure on the bast during the passage of thicker stalks.

5. A machine as in claim 4, wherein the bottom guide is formed as a roller and arranged at the free end of a pivoted lever.

6. A machine as in claim 1, wherein a movable weighted or spring controlled guiding device, for instance a pivoted plate, is arranged above the breaking point.

7. A machine as in claim 6, wherein a guide plate cranked at the front edge and mounted adjustably with the breaking edge guide, for instance on pivoted levers, is arranged below and in front of the breaking point guide.

8. A machine as in claim 1, wherein the tools for breaking and stripping consist of rigid ledges of different heights which are arranged on a drum or other rotating device, or on an endless band or the like.

9. A machine as in claim 1, wherein feeding and guide rollers mounted on rotatable weighted or spring-controlled levers are coupled to driving spindles mounted in fixed bearings by means of universal joints, for instance, ball or cardan joints.

10. A machine as in claim 1, wherein at the back of the vertically adjustable splitting knife are provided oblique surfaces starting from a central rib and effecting a spreading out of the split stalk.

11. A machine as in claim 10, wherein a centering device for the purpose of introducing stalks of different thickness on the centre line is arranged in front of the splitting knife.

12. A machine as in claim 11, wherein the centering device comprises two guide rollers mounted in rotatable bell crank levers, the free arms of which levers are positively connected together by a guide pin engaging with a guide slot.

13. A machine of the kind set forth, having its parts constructed, arranged, and adapted to operate substantially as hereinbefore described with reference to the accompanying drawings, for the purposes specified.

One sheet of drawings.
