Improvements in or relating to aerials for use in wireless telegraphy and telephony.

Abstract.—An aerial, long in relation to the wave length, is substantially reversed in direction at alternate half wave lengths, the arrangement being such that the radiation from these alternate half wave lengths is added to that of the remaining half wave lengths.

The claims are:—

1. An aerial whose electrical length is a plurality of half wave lengths, and which is reversed in direction over part of the half wave length at alternate half wave length sections, whereby radiation from the said alternate half wave length sections, is caused to be additive to that from the other sections in a specifically desired direction, substantially as described.
2. An aerial as claimed in claim 1, and in which the amount of reversal is made different in different parts of the aerial so as to obtain a desired distribution law, substantially as described.
3. An aerial as claimed in claim 2, and in which the amount of reversal is progressively increased in alternate half wave lengths from end to end of the aerial, whereby a substantially uniform radiation per unit linear length of aerial is obtained, substantially as described.
4. An aerial as claimed in any of the preceding claims and in which one or more of the half wave sections is or are formed of a plurality of conductors in parallel substantially as described.
5. An aerial as claimed in claim 4 and in which alternate half wave lengths are constituted each by a plurality of conductors in parallel, said half wave lengths being joined in series by partly reversed single conductors each a half wave length long, substantially as described.
6. An aerial as claimed in any of claims 1 to 3, and consisting of a single conductor formed into a polygonal cage-like structure, substantially as described.
7. An aerial as claimed in any of the preceding claims and comprising an absorptive arrangement for substantially eliminating waves reflected from the end of the aerial, substantially as described.

Improvements in Feed Water Heaters.

Abstract.—Patent 2,340 is modified so that the excess of hot water is delivered into a suction vessel mounted on the suction conduit of the cold water injector. The valve cylinder is provided with a draining orifice above the top of the piston and the piston cylinder wall has an annular recess with an outlet to the atmosphere.

The claims are:—

1. In a feed water heater as claimed in specification No. 2,340 the improvement or modification which resides in that the excess of hot water from the heater is delivered directly into a suction vessel, mounted on the suction conduit of the cold water pump of injector, said suction vessel being open to the atmosphere by means of a vent pipe of suitable height.
2. In a feed water heater as claimed in specification No. 2,340 the improvement or modification which resides in that the cylinder which contains the pressure-balanced valve or the like, or the lower part of the tube through which the steam pressure prevailing in the heater is transmitted to the upper face of said valve or the like, is provided with a draining orifice of small section adapted to provide for the continuous draining of the condensate.
3. In a feed water heater as claimed in specification No. 2,340 the improvement or modification which resides in that the wall of the cylinder which contains said pressure-balanced valve or the like is formed with an annular recess, open to the atmosphere, for discharging any water which would tend to raise above said valve, during the periods where the heater is not supplied with heating steam.

4. In a feed water heater as claimed in specification No. 2,340 the improvement or modification which resides in that the excess of hot water from the heater is delivered directly into one of the suction chambers of the double-acting cold water pump, adapted to feed said heater, the other suction chamber being supplied with cold water from the source of cold water exclusively.

5. Feed water heaters as claimed in specification No. 2,340 substantially as described and as shown in the accompanying drawing.
