NOTIFICATIONS UNDER "THE PATENTS ORDINANCE, 1906."

THE following Specifications have been accepted:—

No. 3,034 of May 20, 1938.

Zoltan Dezsoe and John Ismay & Sons, Ltd.

Improvements in and relating to the production of spiral filaments.

Abstract.—The invention refers to "coiled-coil" filaments. The inventors state that the usual method of preparing such filaments is to wind the wire into a coil of the first order on a mandrel, and then to wind this coil with or without its mandrel on another mandrel to produce a coil of the second order; the mandrel or mandrels are then heated and removed. The removal of mandrels after heating is a troublesome operation and the present invention is for obviating this disadvantage.

According to the invention the coil of the first order with its mandrel is wound on a second mandrel and both mandrels are removed before the main heating commences. The coil is stretched to separate the convolutions and heated in a reducing atmosphere in a furnace to a temperature between 900°C and 2200°C before insertion in the lamp.

The duration of this heating depends on the temperature and the gauge of wire used. If desired the coil of the first order may be heated in air or hydrogen atmosphere to a temperature below 900°C, and the same treatment may be given to the coil of the second order, before the mandrel is removed.

The first mandrel is removed by known chemical means. The second mandrel may be removed chemically or just pulled out.

Improvements in and relating to electric battery lamps.

Abstract.—An electric torch or battery lamp in which the bulb is movable in the direction of the axis for focussing purposes, characterized by the feature that the movement is effected by a lever mechanism combined with a cam action in such a way that a large displacement of an external button slidable in the casing produces a small displacement of the bulb. The inventor states that by this method fine and exact focussing can be attained.

Improvements in and relating to electric battery lamps.

Abstract.—An electric torch or battery lamp in which the lower part of the casing is extensible telescopically to accommodate an extra cell. The upper part of the casing houses a resistance coil and a wiper arm so that a variable amount of resistance can be inserted in the lamp circuit. This is controlled by a button movable transversely to the casing. Thus a bulb of low voltage may be used, and an intense light may be obtained for short periods by cutting off the resistance.

There are six claims and two sheets of drawings.
