THE following Specification has been accepted :—

No 3,039 of June 15, 1938 (Date applied for under Section 50 of the Ordinance June 16, 1937).

Naamlooze Vennootschap : Maatschappij tot Exploitatie van "ten Bosch Octrooien N. V."

Device for filling a compression matrix or similar space with a pulverulent material.

Abstract.—This is an improvement on the invention described in Ceylon Patent No. 2842 for filling a compression matrix with pulverulent material hurled into it by centrifugal force. The inventor states that it has not been found possible to vary appreciably the density of the material in the mould by varying the speed at which the material is centrifuged. The present invention is intended to overcome this defect and consists in interposing a cylinder between the outlet of the room in which the material is centrifuged and the compression matrix. A plunger with adjustable stroke reciprocates in this cylinder. It is so arranged that when the plunger moves forward the matrix is filled with the material; when the plunger is withdrawn and the matrix removed, a disc of compressed material is left forming an air-tight seal on the open end of cylinder; when the plunger starts on its backward stroke, which is limited, fresh material is fed into the space between the disc and end of plunger; when the plunger moves forward again the disc is crumbled up and fed along with some fresh material into the new matrix. By suitably proportioning the parts of the machine constant density can be attained in the material compressed into the matrices; this density can be adjusted by adjusting the stroke of the plunger.—

Suitable mechanism is described.

There are seven claims and one sheet of drawings.

Method of concentrating, separating the constituents of, and purifying colloids in an electric field.

Abstract.—The inventors claim the process of concentrating, separating the constituents of, and purifying colloidal dispersions in an electric field by the formation of layers in cells bounded by diaphragms pervious to electric current and impervious to colloids, characterized by the feature that the concentrated colloidal layer formed at the diaphragm is conducted away, immediately after its formation, out of the middle cell into a receiving vessel communicating therewith through an aperture. The starting colloidal dispersion is continuously fed and the dispersing agent is drawn off through an aperture.—The middle cell is so shaped that it is possible for the concentrated colloidal solution to be conducted away immediately after its formation, so that coagulation and loss of stability are prevented. The rate of admission of the dispersion must be so adjusted that no colloidal-free layer is allowed to collect in the cell.

There are two claims and one sheet of drawings.
