NOTIFICATIONS UNDER "THE PATENTS ORDINANCE, 1906."

THE following Specification has been accepted:—

No. 3,337 of August 20, 1945.

Julian Granville Claessen.

"A locking device for telephones and the hiko".

Abstract.—The nature of the invention can be ascertained from claim (1) which is as follows:—A locking device for telephones and the like made of brass or any other kind of metal consisting of a plug staple with an eye and a groove on it which fits into one of the holes on the dial, the other part consisting of a hinged hasp with a slotted hole at one end to fit on the eye of the plug staple and an open slot at the other end to slip into the groove of the plug staple.

There are 2 claims and one sheet of drawings.

THE following Specifications have been accepted:—

No. 3,344 of September 24, 1945.

Joseph Francis Martyn.

"Improvement in Refrigeration".

Abstract.—The inventor describes and claims a refrigerating system of employing a water solution of solid absorbent, e.g., lithium chloride and working under partial pressure. The elements of the system are:—(a) a generator comprising two chambers connected by a plurality of vertical riser tubes; the solution fills the bottom chamber and a portion of the riser tubes. When heat is applied by means of steam to the riser tubes, vapour is expelled from the solution and rises up each tube carrying with it by vapour lift action an annulus of concentrated solution, (b) condenser, in which the expelled vapour is condensed by the use of circulating water, (c) evaporator, in which the condensed water is evaporated; this is the cooling element of the system, (d) absorber, in which the evaporated vapour is absorbed into concentrated solution giving out heat in the process. Like the condenser, this too is cooled by circulating water, (e) heat exchanger, in which heat is transferred from the concentrated solution to the dilute solution.

Concentrated solution which has been raised by vapour lift flows through the heat exchanger to the absorber where it gets diluted by absorbing water vapour. The dilute solution flows through another passage in the heat exchanger to the evaporator where it is separated into water vapour and concentrated solution. The path of the water vapour is through the condenser and evaporator to the absorber. The generator and condenser work at the same pressure, and the evaporator and absorber at a lower pressure, the pressure differential between the two being maintained by liquid columns.

The evaporator may be positioned in the cooling duct of an air-conditioning system. The temperature of the air to be conditioned may be made to operate sequentially switches which control the flow of oil to the oil-burners which heat the steam boiler.

Suitable apparatus is described. There are 27 claims and two sheets of drawings.

No. 3,345 of September 24, 1945.

Joseph Francis Martyn.

"Improvements in Refrigeration".

Abstract.—The object of this invention is to eliminate the objectionable noises known as "condensate knocking" occurring in the riser tube of refrigerating systems described in Specification No. 3,344. These noises are due to the sudden collapse of vapour bubbles and due to superheating that takes place in the lower portions of the riser tubes. The inventor proposes to apply helical wire inserts in the riser tubes below liquid level in such a way that they fit snugly against the walls of the tubes and impart a swirling motion to the liquid.

There are 8 claims and one sheet of drawings.

No. 3,349 of October 22, 1945.

"Improvement in Refrigeration".

Abstract.—The object of the invention is to remove non-condensable gases from the refrigerant in a two pressure refrigerating system such as that described in Ceylon Specification No. 3,344. This is accomplished by means of a siphon trap in the U tube connecting the condenser and evaporator in which bubbles of gas are trapped in the liquid flowing from the one to the other; these non-condensable gases are withdrawn from the bottom of the main absorber to an auxiliary absorber where after being deprived of as much refrigerant vapour as possible they are siphoned between successive slugs of liquid down a full tube pump. Suitable arrangements are described by which these trapped gases are eventually exhausted to atmosphere.

There are 15 claims and two sheets of drawings.
